SECTION A : READING COMPREHENSION

Question 1

Read the story below and answer the questions that follow

Seahorses

The seahorse is actually a fish, but it doesn't act like one. There are twenty-five different types of seahorses. The largest grows to thirty centimetres but most are only five to ten centimetres long. They have two skeletons: one on the inside of their bodies and the other on the outside. Hard plates cover the body like a suit of armour. Seahorses are usually grey or black.

Seahorses use their tails like monkeys use theirs. They wrap their tails around plants or coral to anchor themselves in place. Seahorses often hide in the same place, often among seaweed, for hours. When they want to move, they use their dorsal fin, which is on their back. Small sea life are sucked into the seahorse's snout-shaped mouth as food.

Male seahorses have pouches like kangaroos. This is part of the interesting way that they breed and care for their young. Eggs are put in the male's pouch by the female. The father seahorse gets so heavy from the weight of the babies in his pouch that he can hardly swim. The babies grow inside the pouch for forty-five days. Then about two hundred baby seahorses wriggle out of the pouch and swim away. Babies are not cared for by their parents. They swim away and hang onto seaweed with their tiny tails. Many are eaten by sea creatures. At five months they are fully grown.
